upon God by his sacred name to forgive the sins of the people. Today Jews say Adonai (my master) for the YHVH; but the most Orthodox will hesitate even to pronounce that substitution except on the holiest occasions, preferring Adoshem instead.

Jehovah, frequently used by Christians to refer to the name of God, is due to Pelrus Galatinus (c. 1500). He combined the consonants YHVII with the vowels of the word Adonai, thus forming the word Jehovah, a word never used nor known in Jewish tradition.

Shekinah is the Hebrew word for "the holy spirit of the Lord."

OLDEST USE OF "FREEMASON"

When was the word "Freemason" first used in print? It is difficult to say, because almost as soon as "the oldest date" is discovered somebody finds an older one.

Here at least is an exceptionally early date. In 1526 William Boude, who signed himself as a "bachelor of divinity," published a work in which occurs the following paragraph, and which is an essay on Speculative Freemasonry if ever there was one.

". . . Then after we have been in the furnace of temptations and tribulations, keeping our souls unbroken, we shall be as nore as the gold. Then if we be touched with a sharp word we shall yield a benign and gentle answer, and give a sweet silver sound as the tried silver. Then we shall be delivered out of our apprenticeship and be made free men. For, as for the four days past, we were but as apprentices, and now in this day we were but as . . . , bound to learn the craft of the exercise of virtues; and now this day we shall be masters of the craft. Example: The freemason setteth his apprentice first long time to learn to hew stones, and when he can do that perfectly, he admitteth him to be a free mason and chooseth him as a cunning man to be a master of the craft, and maketh him a setter or orderer of the same stone, which setting of stones, though it be far greater cunning than is the hewing of stones, yet it is less labor and more quietness. So, in these four days past, we must as apprentices labor continually, and learn to hew, polish, and square the precious stones of virtues, which be to put in the temple of God, builded in our souls, of the which temple Saint Paul speaketh in the wise."
