Expansion of Vocational Education

President Marcos asked for a re-examination of curricula in existing state vocational schools, emphasizing the priority given to the establishment, maintenance and upgrading of vocational schools.

In a memorandum to Secretary of Education Onofre D. Corpuz, the President also ordered that a survey be immediately conducted to determine where more vocational schools can be set up as soon as possible, with national and local needs and capabilities as the primary criteria.

The reexamination of curricula in state vocational schools is aimed at affecting a more vigorous implementation of the government's program of accelerating employment, developing out-of-school youths, and relating vocational education to national development.

The President also directed Secretary Corpuz to impress upon all school officials and other parties concerned that the administration's policy on vocational schools is among the highest in government programming priorities.

Rotary Club of Naga Marks its 22nd Year

Induction of Officers

The Rotary Club of Naga City is celebrating its 22nd anniversary and induction of officers tonight at 8 o'clock in the Ateneo de Naga Gymnasium with a Barrio Fiesta. Native attire is requested to all attending the affair.

The JD orchestra will furnish the music.

The development of vocational education, for both students and out-of-school youths, has been given emphasis since the early part of the President's first term.

In March 1967, the President asked then Secretary of Education Carlos P. Romulo to coordinate with the Department of Labor in developing vocational education in public schools. He asked that innovations in the school system aimed at vitalizing vocational training be explored. The goal, he said, is to give the country a pool of skilled workers for industry.

The President has always viewed vocational training as pertinent to the present stage of development of the country, when skilled labor and technical specialists are needed in almost every area of enterprise.

The President specially asked that the program be focused on the secondary level because many students drop out of school at this stage.

The plan to give out-of-school youths and adults wider opportunities for gainful employment led to the adoption of the manpower development program.

Southern Luzon NICA holds Seminar in Legazpi

LEGAZPI CITY — The National Intelligence Coordinating Agency (NICA), through its Regional Office for Southern Luzon, recently concluded a three-day Seminar on Intelligence and National Security at the Regan Barracks Office in this city.

The seminar, held from June 16 to 18, 1970, was designed as an orientation course on national intelligence and security for government officials who may have access to classified information. Participants came from agencies and offices in the Bicol and Southern Tagalog provinces.

Resource speakers from the NICA head office were: Atty. Nestor F. Domingo, Atty. Jaime R. Gamad and Mr. Aristides G. Osorio. They discussed the following subjects: The Presidency and the National Security Council; National Intelligence Board; NICA; Problems of National Security (Foreign and Domestic); Security and Counterintelligence; Personnel, Document and Physical Security. After each session, an open forum was encouraged for better interpretation of the discussion.

The seminar was the first of its kind sponsored by the NICA and the brainchild of Mr. Hernando R. Ganac, NICA Regional Chief for Southern Luzon.

For future activities and lateral coordination, the participants elected from among themselves, the following officers:

Pres., Atty. Ignacio D. Almoador; Vice-Pres. for Albay, Atty. Antonino Pobre; Vice-Pres. for Legazpi, Mr. Jose B. Barrameda; Vice-Pres. for Naga, Maj. Eduardo S. Rey; Vice-Pres. for Cam. Partial Review

By ANDRES G. DIEZ

A Tribute of High Appreciation

The BICOL STAR highly comments the efficiency and devotion to duty of the Naga City Police Department for the apprehension of one of the maniac-murderers of the late Jesus Diez of Camaligan, Camarines Sur, and Hermenegildo Odiamar of Pacol, City of Naga.

Long wanted by the police departments of Manila, Quezon City, Pasay City, Makati, and Caloocan City for a series of murders and other high crimes, they have succeeded to evade apprehension by the said forces of the law. It took the Naga City Police to prove that no criminal is so evasive and slippery enough if the law-enforcers who are after them are consistent and determined to get them at all costs. Even if only one of the group consisting of several maniacs has fallen into the claws of the law, a great amount of satisfaction has been rendered to the aggrieved parties by the superior sleuthing of the Naga detectives assigned to solve the murder cases.

This satisfactory result is totally in contrast with the two pending murder cases in the same town of Camaligan entrusted to the local Philippine Constabulary and NBI since more than 6 years ago. Despite the fact that both murders were committed early in the evening under separate dates, until now, the PC has miserably failed to find a satisfactory solution of these two pending cases. It is feared that they will have to remain in that status until the end of the world.

The Citizen . . .

papers that there are at least 50 millionaires and multi-millionaires now in Congress. This only goes to show how expensive it is to be elected. Now, what are the proposed reforms?

First again, adoption of a parliamentary or semi-parliamentary system where the President or the Prime Minister or the Chancellor, call him what you may, is elected directly by the legislature. This is to be done by secret ballot and with other safeguards so that there would be no buying of votes. As you very well know, a presidential election, being a nationwide popular election, is necessarily expensive. The presidential candidate has to campaign all over the country once or twice or even three times and he has to distribute as much patronage as he can. On the other hand, in the parliamentary system, or semi-parliamentary system, if you think the parliamentary system is too unstable for us, we have the President or the Prime Minister or the Chancellor elected by the members of Congress from among themselves.

Now, another point: There should be no immediate re-election for all elective officials, from Congressmen and Senators down to barrio council officials. Why is this so? Don't we want professionalism in politics? Yes, but at the same time we know the evils that re-election entails. The moment there is the so-called "equity" of the incumbent, the moment an incumbent wants to run for re-election, very often he uses all means at his command in order to be re-elected, and certainly this is one evil we are trying to avoid.

We complain also of the excessive powers, privileges and prerogatives of members of Congress. Well, there should be constitutional limitations on these powers. For example, prohibition against the practice of one's profession in order to avoid undue advantages for a legislator's clients or business; prohibition against intervention in business so that there will be no or less self-aggrandizement in Congress; also prohibition against well-known political dynasties.

Third: Lack of representation. This is one of the complaints as the root of the current unrest. Why? It is because some people believe, and perhaps rightly so, that they are not truly represented in Congress and so they have to resort to what is known as the "Parliament of the Streets". It is said that our two major parties do not adequately represent the people; that there is no real alternative to the party in power. What after all is the two party system? The two-party system means that to the party in power there should always be an alternative. And if there is no alternative, then the people may be driven to the so-called extra-parliamentary opposition.

Now, what is this due to?

Vice-Pres. for Quezon, Atty. Florentino A. Natividad; Vice-Pres. for Masbate, Atty. Rafael S. Almoradie; Secretary-Treasurer, Capt. Joaquin B. Bocalbos; Auditor, Atty. Eustaquio S. Garcia; P.R.O., Mr. Ildefonso J. Salazar.

The seminar participants plan to hold a reunion-conference during the last week of July this year to deliberate on their future activities. — IJS

Well, this is due not only to the partisan composition of the Board of Inspectors and the Board of Canvassers in our present electoral laws which is sought to be eliminated in the pending Pelaez and Imperial-Montano Bills, but also to the system of single-member districts in our Constitution; that is to say, for every district there is only one representative. Then, what is the proposed reform?
