

Speakout Bicolandia

By JUAN G. FRIVALDO

I have been wondering why Bideco and Munding Cea's plan to put up a sugar central in Bicolandia fizzled out. Could it be that a good friend I know has more faith in Negros sugar than Bicol sweets?

This good friend has reportedly been buying extensive tracts of land. He has considerable landholdings in Cagayan Valley, in Greater Manila area, and in Bataan and Baguio. He has even a villa in Zurich. But then many said he has also taken fancy on choice Negros sugar lands.

One of these he bought was the 900-hectare Hacienda Grande and Hacienda Carmencita in La Carlota, Negros Occidental. It was acquired for P15,000 per hectare from a Spanish family now residing in Madrid. Start figuring the total cost. Mama mia, that runs to a cool P13.5 millions.

The next property he purchased was the 800 hectares Hacienda Oriarte, also in Negros. This was acquired only very recently, after the floating rate, at P20,000 per hectare. Total cost again - wow. P16 million.

Negotiations are believed going on for the purchase of the 700-hectare Hacienda Fe in Bago, Negros Occidental, at a much higher price.

Total cost for Hacienda Fe will be around... susmaria.

The manager of these haciendas is the agriculturist son of a senator.

Would my friends in Negros and in the Bicol Bloc please confirm these purchases? Because if true, I would suggest that we make very strong efforts to invite this Mr. Big, Big landowner to buy haciendas in Bicol so we could establish a sugar central near Naga or Legazpi or Sorsogon. But please, please not in Masbate or in Catanduanes.

The 38 families who fled terrorism in Matnog, Sorsogon and who are now settled in the squatter areas of Paranaque are now getting attention from the department of social welfare, from Camp Aguinaldo civil affairs unit and even from Catholic Charities.

How did this Bantay of Sorsogon happen? During the last election, a top official in Matnog gave P20 to every voter in the town, regardless of party. On condition that they vote for a congressional candidate. Apparently the instructions got crossed or the people did not follow instructions. Because the candidate got very few votes in some barrios. The leader got sore and the next day he brought along some goons and policemen and asked the unfaithful voters to return the P20. Some did, but others could not. They said they have used the money to buy rice, fish and meat. And wham, they were hit with rifle butts, boxed and mauled.

Let us see what the government will do to the poor fugitives from terror.
